

The Dean, School of Education to present the following for the Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Educational Management)

BASHEKA Benon

Basheka studied liberalization policy reforms and their implications on the management of higher educational institutions in Uganda. The study was conceptualized using systems and complexity theories as well as chaos theory. The study used factor analysis to interrogate the key liberalization policy reforms that significantly influenced the management of higher education. The study reports that the higher education challenges of today demand management competencies of higher. These should be anchored in flexible and innovative approaches demanded to exceptionally undertake educational processes at input, process and output levels. The study underscores the need by managers to maintain control over these processes while providing exemplary leadership, inspiration, directing capacities and making stakeholder-driven decisions. The study was supervised by Professor J.S. Musaazi and Dr J.L. Nkata from Makerere University. Partial funding was provided by Uganda Management Institute.

KAGGWA Rosette Victoria (Ms)

Kaggwa examined management practices and teachers' morale building in government secondary schools in Central Uganda. The study revealed that: communication and participatory decision making enhances teachers' ability to work effectively while delegation of duties and responsibilities increases their output. It further revealed that teachers' appraisal through mutually set goals builds teachers' morale and improves their performance. This research elucidates the role of management practices on building workers' morale. Dr.J.L.Nkata and Professor J.S.Owolabi supervised this work. Financial support was provided by Makerere University and Dr. M.B.Tamale.

KYALIGONZA Robert

Kyaligonza investigated the correlates of research output in public universities in Uganda. The study was motivated by the desire to improve the quality and quantity of research output and inspire research policy design and implementation. Results showed significant relationships between financial, human and physical resource correlates and research output. The study makes case for State Intervention Paradigm and universities to be allowed to fix realistic fees according to market forces so as to motivate researchers; upgrade research facilities and provide state-of-the-art facilities for research. The supervisors were Prof. Samuel Owolabi and Dr. James Nkata.

TIBARIMBASA Avitus

Mr. Tibarimbasa studied the factors affecting Private Universities in Uganda. The study was motivated by the desire to make contribution to resolving the internal and external challenges that were affecting private Universities. The results revealed that there were significant relationships between students' enrollment, staffing situation, variations in financial flow and the management of private Universities. The study was supervised by Dr. James Nkata and Dr. Yassin Olum.

The Dean, School of Education to present the following for the
Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Educational Psychology)

BAGUWEMU Ayub Ali

Baguwemu employed both qualitative and quantitative research methodologies to study the coping behaviour of children with motor disability in inclusive school settings. Contrary to the common public perception of disability in terms of the impairment suffered, the study, confirming Lazarus' (1992) person – environment transaction model of stress coping, underlines the need to view mobility disability in terms of environmental barriers. Thus intervention effort should focus more on environmental stressor reduction than rehabilitation of affected individuals. The study was supervised by Assoc. Professor Peter Baguma and Dr. Janet Nambi and financial support was provided by Kyambogo University.

The Director, Institute of Statistics and Applied Economics to present the following for the Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Population Studies)

LUBAALE Yovani Adulamu Moses

Lubaale's study focused on orphans and vulnerable children (OVCs) in Uganda and aimed at finding whether OVCs are homogenous group and explored the relationship between orphanhood and child vulnerability in Uganda. The main source of data was the 2002 Uganda Population and Housing Census. It was found that there is an overestimation of orphaned children and an underestimation of vulnerable children because of exclusion of certain types of vulnerable children. The study found that one in 19 children was in child marriage and one out of 14 girls aged from 12 to 17 years was mother. In addition, the research indicated that among the nomadic ethnic groups, children with disability were sometimes killed. The study recommends that Uganda should invest heavily to improve the condition of vulnerable children and reduce the gap between policy enactment and implementation.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Statistics)

WESONGA Ronald

Wesonga developed stochastic optimisation models using suitable utility functions that can be used as decision making tools for air traffic flow management. These have potential applications in computing the utility levels of aircraft departures and arrivals at an airport. The research was motivated by the desire to contribute to studies that reduce air traffic delays. Professor Venansius Baryamureeba, Professor Xavier Mugisha and Doctor Peter Jehopio supervised this work. Makerere University provided the research funds.
