

MAKERERE UNIVERSITY

THE 62ND CONGREGATION
OF THE UNIVERSITY FOR
THE CONFERMENT OF DEGREES
AND AWARD OF DIPLOMAS

TO BE HELD AT THE FREEDOM SQUARE
FROM MONDAY 16TH JANUARY
TO
FRIDAY 20TH JANUARY 2012
STARTING AT 9.00AM

The Principal, College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences to present the following for the

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Agriculture)

BEYENE Dereje Degefe

Mr. Beyene's research focused on "characterization and expression analysis of isoamylase1 (Meisa1) starch gene in cassava and its wild relatives". In this study a cDNA clone of a Manihot esculenta isoamylase1 gene, a member of starch-debranching enzyme family in cassava storage root was characterized. The gene was observed to exist in two copies in the cassava genome. The gene expression level varies according to developmental stages of tissues (leave, petiole, stem, fibrous roots and storage roots) and storage roots. The gene is dominantly expressed in fibrous root other than other parts of the plant. Meisa1 expression reaches the peak during the early stages of storage root thickening after which it declines to undetectable levels as the storage root thickens. The overall expression pattern study showed that Meisa1 is involved in regulation of granule initiation and root differentiation into storage roots. The SNPs analysis of Meisa1 and G3pdh another gene involved in sugar metabolism show greater genetic diversity in cultivated than wild germplasm. The abundance of Meisa1 in fibrous root and early stage of fibrous roots differentiation to storage roots might be associated with storage root enlargement. Meisa1 was observed as more diverse in cultivated cassava than that in subsp. flabellifolia whereas G3pdh was more diverse in wild than cultivated. This may indicate the importance of isoamylase1 in starch quality traits in cassava, a trait which is likely to have been the target for artificial selection by farmers and breeders, in addition to natural selection. Key findings of his studies are envisaged to be resourceful in exploitation of cassava's full potential for various food and non-food starch applications.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Agriculture-Crop Science)

MBANZIBWA Deusedith Rugaiukamu

Mr. Mbanzibwa's research focused on assessment of the "genetic variability and population structure of Cassava brown streak disease (CBSD) associated viruses in East Africa". CBSD continues to be a serious cause of cassava yield losses in East Africa. The causal agent of CBSD was previously thought to be Cassava brown streak virus (CBSV) alone. This study has clearly demonstrated that there are two distinct CBSD-associated viruses, namely CBSV and Uganda CDSV (UCBSV) following full genome sequencing of each of the viruses. The two viruses are spread all over in East Africa but there is predominance of CBSV in coastal and lowland areas while UCBSV is predominant around Lake Victoria. The UCBSV isolates were less virulent on Benthamina tabacum as compared to the isolates of CBSV. The virulence of these viruses observed in high altitude areas is most likely due to availability of susceptible cassava genotypes introduced through breeding programmes. Atypical of the family Potyviridae, CBSV and UCBSV genomes contained a HAM1-like protein located between the replicase and coat protein at the C-proximal region. The finding of the HAM1h in the genomes of CBSV and UCBSV was novel and unexpected that could play a role in colonization of plants in the family Euphorbiaceae by viruses. The knowledge on distribution and nature of infection is expected to be of practical significance to cassava breeders in the region as it will make it possible to monitor varieties that are resistant to either or both viruses.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Agriculture)

MUYINZA Harriet

Ms. Muyinza identified the phenolic root compounds responsible for conferring resistance to Cylas puncticollis and Cylas brunneus weevils which are the major sweetpotato pests in Africa. Through extensive field and laboratory studies, she demonstrated the effect of these compounds on Cylas weevil biology. Her pioneering research links for the first time sweetpotato root chemical composition and resistance. This research funded by the McKnight Foundation in collaboration with NARO, has provided basis on which breeding for weevil resistant sweetpotato varieties is to be done.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Agriculture)

TUMWEGAMIRE Silver

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Agricultural Extension Education)

OKIROR John James

Mr. Okiror's research focused on the Primary School Agriculture (PSA) curriculum since primary schooling is the terminal level of education for majority of pupils. Vocational agricultural education in Uganda lacks a supervised practical component for transfer of learning. The study compared performance of pupils with school-based gardens and home gardens. Findings showed Supervised Agricultural Experience Projects (SAEPs) improve transfer of learning and that pupils effectively passed gardening information to parents despite English language constraints, timidity and parents to discounting school messages. The study showed that schools can contribute to farming at village level through SAEPs and outreach programs targeting parents. It contributes to the debate on vocational agriculture as a solution to youth unemployment than a dead end competing with priorities of basic Education for All.

TUMUHIMBISE Gaston Ampek

Mr. Tumuhimbise's research focused on the potential of orange fleshed sweetpotatoes (OFSP) as a source of provitamin A carotenoids which are useful in alleviating vitamin deficiency. The study investigated changes in b-carotene bioaccessibility associated with processing and storage of OFSP and its relationship with the changes in tissue microstructure. In vitro models and in vivo models were used to investigate the amount of b-carotene released from the sweetpotato matrix and the amount finally absorbed in the body. The results showed that processing alters OFSP microstructure and improves b-carotene bioaccessibility. The findings further show that that consumption of OFSP is effective in combating vitamin A deficiency. The support of the supervisors; Prof J. Muyonga and Dr. Agnes Namutabi of Makerere University and Prof. Sherry Tanumihardjo of University of Wisconsin, Madison, USA is hereby acknowledged. Financial support from NORAD and Carnegie Corporation of New York enabled this study.

KALUUBA Livingstone Listone

Eng. Kaluuba investigated the fundamental limits of data transmission over a wireless channel and how to overcome this problem through channel coding. The fundamental characteristic of wireless communications is that the communication path or channel is time-varying due to mobility of the user or of objects in the propagation path, and due to multipath signal fading, interference, and noise effects which degrade the received signal. The solution to the problem is to ensure that the intended message is obtainable from whatever is actually received, which is often a corrupted version. Channel coding, adds extra data bits to information bits to make the transmission of data more robust to disturbances present on the transmission channel. Eng. Kaluuba was able to establish the critical design parameters for robust codes and how to optimize these for best results, through simulation of their mathematical models using MATLAB. Prof. Livingstone Luboobi and Associate Prof. Tabani-Wani Gyavira supervised this work. Makerere University – CARNEGIE Project provided financial support.

BALYEIDHUSA Apollo Simon Peter

Mr. Balyeidhusa's research was in the field of African Trypanosomiasis. The research investigated the presence of human infective trypanosomes (Trypanosoma brucei gambiense) in domestic animals in northwest Uganda that cause Gambian type of sleeping sickness. No domestic animal examined in northwest Uganda was detected to have human infective trypanosomes. Probably domestic animals do not pose a potential risk to humans as reservoirs of T. b. gambiense parasites. However, control interventions should still consider treating domestic animals, since in West Africa, they have been implicated as reservoirs of T.b.gambiense. Also, the study revealed that tsetse flies feed on both domestic and wild animals. Tsetse control interventions should involve domestic animals. The research was supervised by Prof. John Enyaru and Assoc Prof. Fred Kironde. The study received funding from Makerere University Directorate of Research & Graduate Training, DAAD, and WHO/ TDR.

NAKALEMBE Immaculate

Ms Nakalembe's research focused on developing an inventory of the indigenous knowledge of indigenous mushrooms of Bunyoro Sub-region, Uganda. She further looked for molecules or compounds in the mushrooms with potential for nutraceutical and drugs. A combination of standard field and laboratory methods were used in this study. Bunyoro sub-region has over 22 edible species of mushrooms used for food and medicine. Several useful molecules and compounds dominant in the most edible mushrooms were characterized, identified and tested, of which were of medicinal importance. The results of this study explain the indigenous use of these mushrooms in the treatment of various ailments including measles. Therefore, this research work opens further research for development of nutraceuticals, medicines and health products, especially for infants and the elderly. The supervisors of this project were Prof. John David Kabasa, Prof. Deogratias Olila and Prof. Taha Nabil and sponsors DAAD, Carnegie Corporation, SIG through the RISE-AFNNET Program and School of Graduate Studies, Makerere University, for funding this research.

SENGOOBA Asuman

Dr. Sengooba investigated the effect of different oxygen tensions on the growth of the respiratory system of Clarias carsonii and Clarias gariepinus species and its implications on fish farming in Uganda. Randomized laboratory based and field based studies were conducted. The gross anatomical and histological organization of the respiratory organs the gills, labyrinthine organs and suprabranchial membrane were quite similar in the two species. There was a positive correlation between growth of the physical respiratory structures and concentration of oxygen. Clarias carsonii was more adapted to low oxygen concentrations and a thus a promising candidate for aquaculture. The variation in oxygen concentration during the day which arises due to pond management practices have implication on fish rearing especially for non air breathing fishes.

KADDU Sarah Birungi

Ms Kaddu's research focused on the contribution of ICTs to the access and utilisation of agricultural information by the rural women in selected districts of Uganda. The study sought to establish the rural women's agriculture needs; the readiness of ICTs application in the access and utilisation of agricultural information by the rural women in Uganda; the challenges faced by the rural women and ICTs providers; and proposing a model for effective access and utilisation of agricultural information by the rural women in Uganda. The findings of the study included: the rural women agricultural information needs; the existence of ICTs infrastructure for access and utilisation of agricultural information by the rural women in some places but not others in Uganda; good practices of ICTs application in developing countries and a developed country; and challenges in accessing agricultural information through ICTs by the rural women in Uganda. The study recommends the establishment of "A Rural information System (URAIIS)", a strategic model for effective access and utilisation of agricultural information by the rural women in Uganda.

MUKUNGU Frederick Nathaniel

Mr. Mukungu's research focused on developing strategies for enhancing information literacy (IL) among university graduates in Uganda. The study was carried out among graduates from four universities – Makerere University, Mbarara University of Science and Technology, Uganda Martyrs University – Nkozi, and Islamic University in Uganda. The findings showed that there were no formal IL programmes in the universities under study at the time of the study. The study suggested a number of strategies for enhancing information literacy among university graduates in Uganda.

MUSANABERA Helen (Ms)

Musanabera, Helen (Ms) Musanabera investigated how urban farmers in Kampala City seek for and use agricultural information. The study was motivated by the fact that Kampala City Council was the first city in Sub-Saharan Africa to accept urban farming by developing city laws for urban agriculture in 2006. But because of lack of appropriate agricultural information services, urban farming in Kampala Capital City Authority is still characterized by low agricultural production. This has led to food insecurity and poverty particularly among the urban poor. The study covered nine parishes from Kawempe, Nakawa and Rubaga Divisions. The researcher employed a blend of mixed methods. Results showed that the farmers experienced problems not only when seeking for agricultural information but also when using it. The researcher recommends that through MAAIF and the NAADS, Government should extend agricultural information services to urban farmers in Kampala Capital City Authority. The information should be timely, relevant, accurate, reliable, and in desired usable forms.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Information Systems)

OYO Benedict

Mr. Oyo's research focused on improvement of participative system dynamics modeling architecture through integration of system dynamics and participatory action research methods. This followed insight from the system dynamics community that modeling process outcomes are often more important than the resulting model. The emerging integrated approach, also, referred to as "SyDPAR" was evaluated against rigour and relevance criteria for information systems methodologies, making it not only an original aspect but a useful outcome. The higher education quality management problem area was used to test the effectiveness of SyDPAR in solving real world problems, and a quality management tool was developed to that effect.

GENZA Gyaviira Musoke

Rev. Fr. Genza's study focused on establishing secondary school teachers' initial biases towards their profession, and on examining the influence of such biases on individuals' eventual in-service practice and self-realization. The study discovered that although the majority of teachers were propelled into profession by dysfunctional biases, the influence of such biases on teachers' eventual empirical practice was both limited and insignificant. Significant influence was only apparent with teachers' metaphysical tendencies of professional self-realization. The study therefore concluded that the ability of initial conceptions to influence individuals' eventual service-delivery was often overstated by past research. Other mediating factors such as the struggle for "financial survival" represent more critical explanatory factors for teacher in-service behavior.

KATOROKIRE Innocent
RWANDEMBO Wilson Mugisha

TEBENKANA Timothy

Mr. Tebenkana Timothy researched about the use the distance education mode for training Art and Design teachers in an environment with limited computer-mediated technologies. The B.Ed (External) programme at Makerere University was the case for study. He conducted a longitudinal survey design and used a mixed method approach to data collection and analysis. The study revealed that the DE mode at Makerere University, in the existing situation, improved Art and Design teachers' skills by 11.88%. The study suggests a model for training Art and Design teachers in a condition with limited computer-mediated technologies. The study was sponsored by the Staff Development Fund at Makerere University and supervised by Dr. Robinah Kyeyune and Dr. Venny Nakazibwe.

SSEMPEBWA Jude

Mr. Jude Ssempebwa investigated the utilization of resources and quality of higher education, taking the case of teaching space and access at Makerere University. Using documentary analysis, observation and interview, he collected data from the School of Education and Faculties of Arts and Science, during the second semester of the 2009/2010 academic year. Establishing it at 7.3%, 6.5% and 26% in the School of Education and Faculties of Science and Arts respectively, he found the rate of use of teaching space to be minimizing access to the University. He found the suboptimal rate of use of teaching space to be due to incongruence between classes and the capacity of the teaching areas to which they are assigned. This incongruence was found to be due to inadequacy of students, lecturers, teaching aids and lack of teaching area partitioning technology, to customize teaching areas to the classes assigned to them. Rather than curtail intake or erect more teaching areas, the University should employ more lecturers, increases the availability teaching aids, devises teaching area partitioning technology and enrolls more students. The research project was supervised by Professor Samuel Olajide Owolabi and Doctor Fred E. K. Bakkabulindi

KIGGUNDU-MUSOKE Muhammad
Mr. Kiggundu- Musoke investigated on the major causes of Islamic Fundamentalism in Uganda. In order to reflect the global concern, he traced the operation of Islamic Fundamentalism in the world and narrowed it down to Uganda. Using the qualitative approach and simple statistics for data analysis, results revealed gross misrepresentation of Islam by perceiving Islam as aggressive, hostile and violent because of the actions of some Muslims (Non Shariah Experts) in search for political, religious, social and economic identity, described as Islamic Fundamentalism. The study concluded that the term Islamic Fundamentalism is a western use. The Muslim World recognizes Islamic revivalism and not Fundamentalism because it is incumbent on every Muslim to follow the fundamentals of Islam. Therefore, a need for a term to brand information about dubious acts committed under the guise of Islam. The research Doctoral committee included Professor Emeritus A. B. T. Byaruhanga Akiiki, Dr. Deusdedit R K Nkurunziza, Dr. M Bakaluba Tamale, Dr. J Kaahwa, and Dr. E. Wamala. Makerere University sponsored it.

OIRIKIRIZA Celestino

Celestino Oriikiriza (PhD Linguistics) observes that the corpus method of elicitation and arrangement of multiple meanings of words in the compilation of dictionaries in less documented and undocumented languages, such as Bantu languages, is not viable. He reasons that there is insufficient literature from which to develop the corpus, since the languages are less written, or not written at all. Therefore, he recommends the use of the semantico-syntactic method of elicitation of multiple meanings of words, and the alpha-syntacticosemantic mode of arrangement of the meanings; the findings of his study. All this as presented in his PhD thesis in linguistics entitled Elicitation and Arrangement of Meanings in the Lexicography of Bantu Languages. The work was supervised by Dr. K.B. Kiingi and Dr. J. Kalema. The sponsors were Makerere University, SIDA-Sarec and African Humanities Program of the American Council of Learned Societies, New York.

From the Deputy Vice Chancellor (AA)'s Ink Pot: Focus on Quality Assurance

Offering Relevant University Education: Field Attachment/ Internship as a strategy.

Stakeholders in higher education recognise that conventional education is no longer adequate in today's environment. Practical training is invaluable to the quality and relevance of university training and prepares a student much better for the world of work. In addition to critical thinking based on "scientific" theory, students must be enabled to translate theory into practice.

As a reaction to the changing expectations of the market, Makerere University obliges all students to engage in field attachment as a pre-requisite for graduation. The policy covers not only science but also the programmes in the Humanities and Social Sciences.

Field attachment refers to field-based practical training carried out by staff and students for the purpose of teaching and/or research. In most cases the training is conducted in places outside a University's control (host institutions). This experiential learning is known in some circles as Industrial Training, Internships or Community Based Education.

It is a partnership

Successful running of field attachment depends on the commitment of the various stakeholders in the partnerships

- the university; students; the academia and host organisations.

Commitment is based on the fact that each of the key stakeholders benefits from the arrangement. Makerere thus aims at creating strategic linkages with industry and the public sector in offering this experiential learning.

Benefit to host organisation

For the host organisations (private industries, local and central government departments etc), this is an opportunity to be involved in the training of potential employees. As potential employers, organisations are enabled to voice their ideas about the competencies they would find useful in a graduate. FA translates into University-Private/Public Sector linkages which enable the various partners who "consume" products of the University to participate in curricula development and review. Further still FA is a form of exposure to a pool of potential employees and can serve as a possible recruitment conduit for organisations. This would ultimately reduce the costs of induction of new employees. The interaction between the industry and the academia can also lead to collaboration in research in areas of interest to the organisation.

Benefit to the academia and the university

The academia should be motivated by the fact that Field Attachment offers opportunities for staff to generate joint research activities with industry. The relevancy and value of universities thereby become more visible to society. The programme also enables the university to appreciate field situations and client demands and the quality of graduate required to fulfil these demands

- it generates information for curricula improvement. FA is an opportunity for the university to access training facilities and resources not available at the institution.

To the student.

FA offers students opportunity to meet and work with potential employers - bringing students out of the world of theory into the real world. Students are enabled to understand the work environment and this offers effective preparation for the market place. It offers students opportunity to apply theory to real-life problem solving situations - students acquire new knowledge, practical experiences and skills. Such experience improves the students' confidence in problem solving since experiential learning stimulates creative, critical and independent thinking among learners.

Value to the Nation.

FA ensures that professionals in diverse fields are trained in a community setting. Community Based training often instills a spirit of service, volunteerism/nationalism into young people. Community training also ensures that the University gives back to the community in that it undertakes problem based training and research and thus deals with the priority needs of communities.
