BATWALA Kiirya Vincent

“Parasite-based diagnosis for malaria in Uganda: Feasibility and Cost-effectiveness”

Dr. Vincent Kiirya Batwala investigated on parasite-based diagnosis for malaria; with the aim of improving the management of febrile illnesses which are the major killers in Uganda. The accuracy; feasibility and cost-effectiveness of different diagnostic methods were tested including microscopy; rapid diagnostic tests that are based on the detection of histidine rich protein-2 produced by Plasmodium falciparum; and polymerase chain reaction that detects ribosomal DNA with the high quality control exhibited. Vincent Batwala’s research found out that rapid diagnostic tests for malaria are more accurate, feasible and cost-effective compared to microscopy; and recommends that the use of rapid diagnostic tests should be scaled-up in areas where malaria is a common cause of fever. Funders: DBL Centre for Health Research and Development, University of Copenhagen, Denmark; TAEGETS Makerere University School of Public Health/Department for International Development (DFID) project; and Belgian Technical Cooperation (BTC). Supervisors: Prof. Fred Nuwaha; Prof. Pascal Magnussen; and Dr. Kristian Schultz Hansen.

KAGIMU Magid

“The interrelationship between religiosity and HIV infections in Uganda: A Community Case Study”

Dr. Kagimu examined the association between religiosity and HIV prevalence rates in a case-control study. The cases were HIV positive youth 15-24 years and the controls were HIV negative youth. He discovered that higher levels of religiosity were associated with lower HIV infection rates. Among Christians, praying privately frequently, was the most significant dimension associated with lower HIV infection rates. Among Muslims, those with Sujda, the black spot on the forehead as a result of prostration during regular prayers, had lower HIV infection rates. He concluded that religiosity, especially the dimensions that were significantly associated with lower HIV infection rates, should be scaled up by all stakeholders involved in implementing faith-based HIV prevention interventions. The study was supervised by Assoc. Prof David Guwatudde, Department of Epidemiology and Biostatistics and Prof Charles Rwabukwali, Department of Sociology.

WAISWA Peter Kyobe

“Understanding Newborn Care in Uganda - Towards Future Interventions”

Peter Waiswa investigated the delays which lead to newborn deaths, and the acceptability at community level of the evidence-based newborn care practices in eastern Uganda. He found that whereas most globally recommended newborn care practices were acceptable to the local community, a few were not. Also, care practices for newborn babies were of poor quality, and most babies died because of delays at home related to inability of households to recognise sick newborns or deciding to seek for care from a health facility, or health facilities lacked capacity to care for newborn babies. Comprehensive health facility strengthening and use of community health workers to promote newborn care is recommended. The findings informed the Uganda national Community Health Worker (in the Village Health Team (VHT)) policy. Funding: SIDA, Save the Children and the Bill Gates Foundation. Supervisors: Ass. Prof. George W Pariyo (MaK), and Prof. Goran Tomson and Prof. Stefan .S. Peterson (both Karolinska).

ADEMUN Rose Okurut (Ms)

“Effect of foot and mouth disease (FMD) in cattle on household income in selected agropastoral and pastoral areas of Uganda

Dr. Ademun focused on justifying the control of FMD and determining the effect of FMD on household incomes, cattle and crop production, delivery of social amenities, and cattle market revenues in four districts: Katakwi, Kumi, Bukedea and Kiruhura. This study found a high economic cost of FMD of between USD90 to USD400 per household in eastern districts of which over 50% was due to losses in draught power, FMD affected 40% of social amenities delivery in these agropastoral districts, but only 0.01% in Kiruhura district due to continued cattle sales during quarantine. The agropastoral districts lost 66% to 88% of cattle market revenues during FMD quarantine. FMD vaccinations cost USD2.64 per head of cattle but would save agropastoral households about 2 times the cattle enterprise profitability and 3.9 times in Kiruhura. The effect of FMD was much felt in agropastoral areas. Uganda needs an appropriate

OKUNI Julius Boniface

‘Molecular and Pathologic diagnosis of paratuberculosis in cattle from selected districts of central Uganda’

Dr. Okuni focused on improving the diagnosis of bovine paratuberculosis, an economically important disease of livestock. The highlights of this study included: the determination of the prevalence of this disease at farm level as well as among slaughtered cattle, the characterisation of the pathogen and its specific effects on affected cattle; and the development of an immuno-histo-chemical method based on recombinant Heat shock protein 70kd, used for the first time ever in the diagnosis of this disease. The study found that the level of the disease is unexpectedly high for a country with limited documentation of its occurrence, moreover high strain diversity of the agent of paratuberculosis, including novel ones imply that this disease might have a complex epidemiology in the country. The supervisors were Professors Ojok Lonzy (MAK), Reinacher Manfred (Justus-Liebig, Giessen) and Dr. Loukopoulos Panayiotis (A.U.Th), with support from Carnegie, SGS-MAK and Aristotle University of Thessaloniki.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Veterinary Medicine)

SSEMWANGA Deogratius

“Multiple HIV-1 Subtype Infection and Transmitted Drug Resistance; Prevalence in HIV-1 Infected Ugandans and Association to Disease Stage and Progression”

Mr. Ssemwanga investigated how often HIV-1 positive individuals get re-infected with other HIV-1 types and how this affects their disease progression to AIDS and death. The study also investigated how often people get infected with drug resistant HIV-1. HIV-1 positive patients that were re-infected with more HIV-1 types were 14% and 9 % of newly infected patients had drug resistant HIV-1. Patients that were infected with more than one HIV-1 type were found to progress faster to AIDS and death. HIV-1 positive patients should therefore avoid getting re-infected with more/other HIV-1 types using recommended prevention strategies to avoid complications like increased disease progression leading to AIDS and death. Infection with drug resistant HIV-1 limits treatment options for patients thereby complicating patient care. The study was supervised by Prof. Williamson Carolyn, Prof. Lubega George William and Prof. Kaleebu Pontiano with financial support from the British Medical Research Council.

AGABA Hilary

“Plant Available Water and Tree Seedling Survival in Hydrogel Amended Soils Under Induced Drought Conditions”

Mr. Agaba’s research focused on finding solutions to the problem of moisture stress in different soils that limits tree seedling survival and growth. It involved applying Superabsorbent Polyacrylate (SAP) hydrogels i.e. substances that absorb water many times their weight, retaining and releasing it slowly to plant roots. The findings show that hydrogels significantly increased plant available water and prolonged tree seedling survival with reduced evapotranspiration compared to soils without hydrogels. Hydrogels saved water and labor by reducing irrigation frequency, yet producing more plant biomass. These findings imply that hydrogels can be applied to plant trees in sandy soils and drought prone environments leading to provision of the much needed tree products and services, thereby contributing to mitigating climate change effects and improving peoples’ livelihoods. The study was supervised by Prof. Joseph Obua, Prof. John David Kabasa and Prof. Dr. Huttermann (R.I.P). Funding was provided by the KAAD, Germany, The BASF Chemical Company, Germany and the National Agricultural Research Organization (NARO).

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Ecosystems)

ORIKIRIZA Lawrence Justus Baguma

“Enhancing Tree Performance in Degraded Dryland Soils using Super Absorbent Polyacrylate Hydrogels”

Mr. Orikiriza carried out research on Super Absorbent Polyacrylate (SAP) Hydrogels. These chemical substances absorb and store water several times their weight and such water may be slowly extracted when needed. The study focused on assessing strategies for improving the productivity of degraded dry land forest ecosystems using hydrogels to enhance tree performance under natural field and controlled conditions, with and without water stress. The research was motivated by the desire to increase the resilience of important tree species to water stress under the changing climate. He investigated the effects of SAP Hydrogels on tree species performance. The results show that the Hydrogels increased tree survival, growth performance and biomass production in drought prone environments hence tree planting in these environments can be achieved with the use of hydrogels. The study is valuable to stakeholders engaged in tree planting for restoration, land rehabilitation, pasture improvement, as well as optimal utilization of land and production in drought prone environments ultimately contributing to the ecosystem health and rural livelihoods.

MIRUMBE Geoffrey Ismail

"Distribution solutions to ordinary differential equations with polynomial coefficients on the real line"

Mr. Mirumbe "lifted" ordinary differential equations with polynomial coefficients on the real line to the complex plane and used the vast classical results in complex analysis, sheaf theory, homological algebra, distribution theory and analytic D-module theory to prove that for a class of locally Fuchsian differential equations, the dimension of the distribution solution space is the order of the ordinary differential equation plus the sum of all multiplicities of the zeros of the leading polynomial coefficient of the differential equation. He further proved an existence Theorem for fundamental solutions to a class of locally Fuchsian differential equations using the "flag" lemma and theories from linear algebra. This work was funded partly by staff development (fees waivers) and also the International Science Program (ISP) through its arm the East African universities Mathematics program (EAUMP). The supervisors were Dr. V.A. Ssembatya (Director, Quality Assurance Directorate, Makerere University), Prof. Rikard Bogvad and Prof Jan Erik Bjork both of Stockholm University.

MULUMBA John Waswa

"Phonetic, Distribution and Genetic structure Genetic structure of Acacia senegal (L.) wild. in Uganda"

Mr. Mulumba Wasswa's research focused on the taxonomy, diversity distribution and population structure of the Gum Arabica tree (Acacia senegal). He described the three varieties that occur in Uganda and developed taxonomic keys for their identification. He mapped the distribution of the species' varieties and determined the climatic factors that influence their distribution. He determined genetic variability in the species and the population structure across the cattle corridor. The results provide a basis for developing management plans for the species and for developing the species as an important industrial crop in the cattle corridor and particularly for Karamoja. Gratitude to Dr Esether Kakudidi and Dr Silvester Nyakaana, the Supervisors plus the Doctoral Committee.

NALUKENGE Winnie Nkalubo (Ms)

“Life history traits and growth of Nile perch, Lates niloticus (L.), in Lake Victoria, Uganda: Implications for management of the fishery.”

Ms. Nkalubo’s research quantified key life history traits of the introduced Nile perch in northern Lake Victoria (Uganda) with the major goal of providing information to facilitate the development of predictive sustainable management strategies for this fishery. This study was the first to validate aging of Nile perch using sagittal otoliths (ear stones) by quantifying the periodicity and timing of opaque zone formation. Male Nile perch attained maximum size faster than their female counterparts, while the females reached a much larger size at older ages. A downward trend in both the age and size at maturity was detected suggesting a shift in maturation schedule. Overall, size selective mortality and its effects on yield determining traits seem to be, at least in part, responsible for the changes observed over time in the Nile perch population.

NYEINGA Edward Drani

"Dynamic Model for Small Scale Concentrating Solar Energy System with Heat Storage"

The research focused on the development of a dynamic model for solar thermal storage systems at high temperature. The model is based on numerical integration of a set of conservation equations for mass, momentum and energy of the heat carrier, the rock pebbles and the walls. The numerical solutions are implemented based on implicit time integration without iterations. Stability problems at large time steps do not occur. The model predicts pressure, air velocity, air density and temperatures of the air, rock bed and wall in time and along the container. Nyeinga has developed a compressive tool that can be used for design and operational studies to aid the rapid development of a solar oven system with high temperature heat storage. The supervisors were Professor Eldad E.J.K Banda, Department of Physics, Makerere University and Professor Ole Jorgen Nydal, Department of Energy and Process Engineering, Norwegian University of Science and Technology (NTNU), Norway.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Physics)

OKELLO Denis

"Rock bed thermal energy storage for solar cooking"

"Mr Okello examined the use of rock particles packed in a container for storing thermal energy that can be used for cooking and for other applications requiring heat in the range of 100 oC to 350 oC. The research was motivated by the desire to design a system that can use solar energy to cook at any time. The potential of using such systems for solar application in Uganda is evaluated and it is observed that the northern and eastern parts of the country has highest potential for small domestic systems as well as for other large scale solar industrial applications. The results shows that rock particles can be used to store heat and both charging and discharging rates can be varied by varying the airflow speed through the system. The research was supervised by Professor Eldad Banda and Professor Ole Jorgen Nydal.

TEBANDEKE Emmanuel

“Synthesis and characterization of selected polyoxometallates and their applications in catalysis”

Mr. Tebandeke developed catalysts that can be applied in the industrial production of useful chemical products. He designed highly efficient processes for the epoxidation of olefins using molecular oxygen or hydrogen peroxide oxidant, catalysed by gold or silver catalysts supported on polyoxometallates (POMs). He also developed methods for carbon dioxide (CO₂) chemical fixation into epoxides to produce useful cyclic carbonates. In addition, he designed silver containing POMs for the direct synthesis of cyclic carbonates from olefins and CO₂. The different catalysts can be adapted for large scale industrial production of epoxides and cyclic carbonates. He wishes to thank his supervisors Prof. Henry Ssekaalo and Prof. Ola F. Wendt for their guidance. He wishes to acknowledge financial support from IPICS, SIDA and DAAD. He also acknowledges support from the Principal CONAS, Dean SPS and members of the Department of Chemistry, Makerere University.

WANYAMA Philip Aaron Guloba

“Characterization and Analysis of Some Natural Dyes from Selected Plants in Uganda”

Mr. Wanyama Aaron's PhD work focused on extraction and characterization of dyes from selected plants in Uganda. Thousands of plants in Uganda are potentially rich in natural dye compounds suitable for textile coloration. They represent a viable alternative to some of the toxic and environmentally harmful artificial chemical dyes being used in the textile industry today. His pioneer work in Uganda discovered novel dye compounds present in different plants, especially those having tannin chromophores in their molecular structures. These natural dyes exhibited very good colour and surface colour absorption characteristics on cotton fabrics. Through careful cultivation of these plants for dye extraction and commercialization of their extracts, they offer sustainable income generating opportunities for many of our people especially those in the rural communities of Uganda. The study was funded by Kyambogo University under the supervision of Prof. B.T. Kiremire and Dr. J.E.S. Murumu of the Chemistry Department, Makerere University.

Kamya John

“Challenges of Domesticating International Human Rights Treaties: A Case Study of the Convention on the Rights of the Child in Uganda”

Mr. Kamya investigated the challenges involved in implementing international human rights treaties through domestication by contracting states. He sought to minimize the rampant phenomena of value crash existing between internationally set human rights standards and local cultures and customs. He employed a case study method, understudying the process of domesticating the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child in Uganda. As a result, he developed the 'Participatory Domestication Model' through which international human rights values can be harmonized with those of the local communities. This will greatly improve the realization of human rights in society, both locally and globally. Supervisors: Professor Lillian Tibatemwa Ekirikubinza and Dr Byaruhanga A. Rukooko. Funders: Ford Foundation (International Fellowship Programme).

Mujinya Edidah Mary Kanyesigye (Ms)

“Education and Moral Building in Uganda; A Case of Selected Secondary Schools in Bushenyi District, Western Uganda”

Rev. Mujinya set out to establish the relationship between Education and moral building in Uganda, in selected Secondary Schools in Bushenyi District. She went on find out the relationship between ethics and postmodernism tends; she further examined the effects of moral degeneration among the youths. She finally identified challenges facing formal education in promoting moral behaviour in Uganda. Edidah recommended that the government should address the motivation of teachers, increase their number, support vocational education, stipulate regulations on electronic and print media; train and retool school administrators. Above all, there should be continuous sensitization of parents and guardians about their irreplaceable roles and responsibilities. She was supervised by Associate Professor, Edward Wamala. She was financially supported by the Anglican Church of Canada.

MATAGI Leonsio

“Competency, work attitudes and performance of Sub-County chiefs in the Ugandan Local Government”.

Mr. Matagi conceptualized that if high competency levels predict favorable work attitudes and performance of district service providers, then the outcome is likely to be good governance under the decentralized system. The study employed a cross-sectional survey design using both qualitative and quantitative approaches. Through competency analysis, it was discovered that the job of a sub-county chief has seven key performance areas of human resource management, revenue mobilization, monitoring, supervision, budgeting, accountability, and financial management. Competencies augmented positive attitudes toward work, and derived positive behaviors and better work outcomes. Competency distinguishes successful employees from the unsuccessful ones. Work attitudes and work quality can be improved when competencies and job requirements are closely matched to maximize job fit. Public sector reforms should recognize the centrality of human resource management, especially the significance of skill management through the creation of human resource competencies. Mr. Matagi was supervised by Prof. Peter Baguma and Prof. Murindwa Rutanga, and got funding from I@mak Project.

TUMUKWASIBWE Robert

“Legislative Promotion of Socio-economic Human Rights in Uganda through the Budget Process”

Mr. Tumukwasibwe explored, through a qualitative methodology, how the Uganda Parliament used its budget-making powers to shape foreign loans and public budgets to facilitate the realization of socio-economic human rights of disadvantaged Ugandans. He found that Uganda Parliament did not use its powers to influence the budget in favor of the disadvantaged Ugandans. Instead, the primary beneficiaries were western capitalism and the local ruling elites. Through executive pressure, legislative power was emasculated and disabled from championing the socio-economic rights of the marginalized Ugandans. Tumukwasibwe contends that until the disempowering neoliberal fiscal policies are deconstructed, politics democratized and parliamentary work underpinned with human rights principles, the prospects of the legislature influencing the budget in favor of the poor will remain a fantasy. The supervisors were Prof. Murindwa-Rutanga and Prof. Ben Twinomugisha.

“The Socio-Economic Impact of HIV/AIDS on Households in Bushenyi District, Uganda”

With the current rising HIV prevalence in Uganda, Benon Musinguzi set out to investigate the socio-economic impact of HIV/AIDS on households in Bushenyi district, Uganda. He examined this phenomenon in the context of the households’ demographic and socio-economic backgrounds. He found out that the households with HIV/AIDS illnesses/deaths experienced higher costs of managing the illness compared to other long illnesses and were more likely to experience the highest level of impact on their welfare. He also found that the demographic and socio-economic backgrounds of the households, that is, sex, age, religion, level of income and education had a great influence on the impact of HIV/AIDS on the households. His research is another step in informing the policy makers that specific and directed policies guided by the demographic and socio-economic backgrounds of the households be spearheaded by government in order to uplift the welfare of the affected households.

“The Implications of Antiretroviral Therapy/ Drugs on Sexual Behaviour and the Prevention of HIV in Uganda”

Mr. Sensalire investigated the implications of antiretroviral therapy/drugs on sexual behaviour and HIV prevention. He examined this phenomenon in the context of the pronounced unsafe sexual behaviour and advanced biomedical research into the AIDS vaccine. He found out that therapeutic benefit resulted into risky sexual behaviour among individuals whose illness had previously inhibited risky sexual behaviour and widely enforced the concept that HIV is less dangerous and just like any other infectious diseases manageable on drugs among the general population. He added that advanced biomedical research into the AIDS vaccine has demystified the reality that AIDS has no cure. His research is a further step in informing about a potential for continued HIV transmission and disease burden as long as negative perception of ARVs prevail and the negative consequences of HIV decline.

“Panel Data Analysis of Hospital Expenditure: A Case Study of 27 Catholic Hospitals in Uganda”

Mr. Omala’s research explored the cost structure of private hospitals in Uganda using the panel data technique, which offers control for unmeasured subject heterogeneity that might otherwise bias results. The findings showed that hospital expenditure reduced with higher facility utilization and better qualified workers. Therefore, there is need to put in place planning systems to upscale utilization and enforce appropriate recruitment of hospital workers. Further, the results indicated that it was cheaper to produce different hospital outputs jointly rather than separately. This supports the current policy of establishment of regional referrals with specialized units. The study was supervised by Dr. Odwee Jonathan and Dr. Ocaya Bruno.

“Modeling the Longevity of Completion of Higher Degree Studies at Makerere University”

The study investigated the dynamics of completion of doctoral studies at Makerere University. Using administrative data of all 295 PhD students at the University in the 2000 to 2005 enrollment cohorts, the aptness of implementing a time-to-event approach and a multinomial logistic regression was illustrated. The completion estimate (15.0%), based on the five-year maximum permissible period of PhD training stipulated in the University Human Resource Manual, suggests a low timely completion rate for the university’s doctoral students. The rate of completion was higher for younger students, those registered in science disciplines, international students, and those from earlier enrolment periods (i.e., 2000 to 2002). Extended candidature beyond five years, rather than withdrawal, was more likely among the financially aided students and those in the sciences. The findings reveal that the dynamics of completion are not entirely unique to Makerere but relate with experiences reported among other universities elsewhere. Nevertheless, the results point to a need to establish measures to promote progress in doctoral studies at early stages of commencement as well as throughout the course of candidature. This study was supervised by Prof. Joseph J. Oonyu and Dr. Bruno Ocaya.

KAGARURA Willy Rwamparagi

“Direct Payments for Healthcare in Uganda's Health System: Effects on Household Welfare”

Mr. Kagarura analysed the effect of direct payments on household welfare in Uganda using the 2005/6 national Household Survey data. Although direct out-of-pocket health expenditure has catastrophic effects, it remains the main source of health financing in Uganda. He found that 19.3% of all households experienced catastrophic health expenditure following different socio-economic characteristics. That households cope by reducing on vital expenditures like education, housing and others including investment; although food is still protected. Spending on health increased household poverty by 5.8% and Mr. Kagarura calls for government effort to protect the population against catastrophic health expenditure. He recommends social protection programmes and prepaid schemes at all levels to avert the associated omission and resource effects. He finally argues for adjustment in poverty computation methodologies so as not to understate national poverty figures. The study was supervised by Prof. John Ddumba-Ssentamu and Dr. Bruno Yawe. He received financial Assistance from the DGRT – Makerere University, African Economic Research Consortium (AERC) and the African Initiative Exchange Program of the Centre for International Governance Initiatives (CIGI) of Canada for his Dissertation Completion Program.

KIZZA James

“Technical Efficiency and Total Factor Productivity of Makerere University 1997-2007”.

Mr. Kizza's research focused on investigating the level of technical efficiency and total factor productivity growth of Makerere over the period 1997 – 2007. The study employed the Data Envelopment Analysis and Malmquist productivity index methods and the findings were analyzed using DEAP 2.1 software program developed by Coelli (1996). Results from technical efficiency indicate that Makerere can save resources of up to 5.5 percent to produce the current level of output. Results from scale efficiency indicated room for Makerere to achieve improved efficiency by expanding her scale of operation by 13.9 percent of the current operation level. The results from the Malmquist index indicate the existence of pure technical and scale inefficiencies as well as total factor productivity regress. The study was under the supervision of Dr. Bruno Yawe and Dr. Fred Matovu.

“Social Protection and the Vulnerable Poor: The role of Social Safety nets in Poverty Reduction in Uganda”.

Mr. Nahamya's research focused on assessing the role of Social Safety Nets in poverty reduction among the vulnerable poor households in NUSAF areas in eastern Uganda. The study employed a triangulation of methodologies; Focus Group Discussions, key informants interviews and a structured face to face questionnaire to collect data in the districts of Kaberamaido, Katakwi, Kumi and Soroti. Multinomial logistic regression and a logit model were used to analyze the data. Participants in the NUSAF program as a Social Safety Net were found to be four times more likely to come out of poverty compared to their counterparts that never participated. The study was under the supervision of Dr. Eria Hisali and Dr. Edward Ssennoga and partly sponsored by Kyambogo University.

MUNYAMBONERA Ezra Francis

“Determinants of Commercial Bank Performance in Sub-Saharan Africa”

Munyambonera Ezra Francis set out to investigate the determinants of commercial bank performance in Sub-Saharan Africa (SSA), from 42 countries and 216 group banks, for the period 1999 to 2006. Specifically, the research focused at bank profitability and total factor productivity growth, as among the key measures of bank performance. Bank level and macroeconomic factors, using panel methods and panel data were applied in the measurement of bank performance in profitability and total factor productivity growth. The findings demonstrate the importance of both banks level and macroeconomic in influencing bank behavior in SSA.

KINENGYERE Alison Annet (Ms)

“Utilisation of electronic health information resources in Universities in Uganda”

Ms. Kinengyere investigated the utilization of electronic health information resources (e-resources) in selected Universities offering medical education in Uganda. While e-resources support learning, teaching, research, their usage by students, academic staff and researchers was found to be relatively low. The study started from the premise that improved usage of the resources promotes access to relevant and timely information, and ultimately effective healthcare services delivery. Strategies for improved usage of the costly resources, such as integration of information literacy into the curriculum, and setting minimum standards for libraries in upcoming institutions of higher learning were suggested. It is therefore anticipated that the research will inform policy regarding these strategies. A health information utilization model was developed, which adds to theory and the existing body of knowledge in Library and Information Science.

NAZIR Ahmad Suhail

“Optimization Based Blended Learning Framework for Constrained Bandwidth Environment”

Mr. Suhail Ahmad developed a novel blended learning framework that addressed the most critical issue not addressed by the existing blended frameworks, by optimizing network efficiency and multimedia (learning content) performance. The issue is a barrier towards the adoption of new teaching and learning approach at higher education in developing countries. The framework emphasizes that performance of multimedia can be improved when network and application are both optimized, in return that would increase the perceived level of user satisfaction, enhancing the blended learning process in LDCs. And increasing the perceived level of user satisfaction in LDCs is a big mile stone indeed. The novelty of this research is that it linked practical with theoretical foundation and relevant literature, aimed to make both scientific and practical contribution, and laid the foundation stone for further research in the area to make subsequent developments.

WAKABI Waiswa Peter Patrick

“Association Rule Mining Using Evolutionary Computing”

Mr Wakabi’s research focused on the applicability of multi-objective genetic algorithms to the association rule mining problem of the knowledge discovery and data mining processes. The exponential growth of the number of rules in large databases makes the association rule mining algorithms to be computationally very expensive and face scaling difficulties with increasing dimensionality. By developing new rule quality metrics in combination with query-based dimensionality reduction techniques and dynamic allocation of fitness cases, a new scalable inexpensive approach to generating optimal association rules has been introduced. This approach was successful in significantly improving the efficiency of the algorithm. A number of exemplar rules discovered were found easily interpretable, understandable and interesting by the domain experts.

“Fusarium and fumonisin contamination of maize produced in Uganda”

Mr. Atukwase’s research focused on contamination of maize with Fusarium species and fumonisins. The findings indicated that majority of maize samples obtained from 3 major maize producing agroecological zones were infested with F. verticillioides and F. proliferatum that are known to be the major producers of fumonisins; a mycotoxin that is associated with esophageal cancer among maize consuming populations. The fumonisin levels in majority of the maize samples were above the UNBS recommended levels of 5 mg/kg. Majority of F. verticillioides and F. proliferatum strains isolated from maize were high fumonisin producers. The study concluded that the maize consuming population in Uganda could be exposed to high levels of fumonisins. Crop rotation, timely harvesting, drying on raised structures and proper storage were some of the practices that were found to reduce contamination of maize with fumonisins. The research was funded by NORAD and Carnegie Co-operation of New York and supervised by Prof. A.N Kaaya and Prof. Charles Muyanja.

“Spatial and Seasonal Dynamics of Rangeland Herbage: An Integration of Proxy and Direct Monitoring Approaches”

Mr. Mfitumukiza investigated the applicability of medium and high resolution satellite images in assessing, monitoring and predicting rangeland forage quantity and quality in south western Uganda. His research was motivated by the need for an alternative approach to quadrat harvesting based approach of herbage assessment and monitoring which is known to be limited to small area coverage, time consuming, destructive and expensive. He demonstrated that herbage quantity and quality can be assessed using herbage cover and species composition respectively as proxy measurements. A model for predicting seasonal herbage yield and its spatial distribution was developed. The thesis documented reliable methods and information useful for establishing rangeland monitoring protocols and stocking capacities. The supervisors were Dr. D. Mpairwe, Prof. M.T. Tenywa and Prof. Sandy S. Tickodri-Togboa. The study was funded by Rockefeller Foundation, DAAD and International Foundation for Science.

“Enhancing the performance of farmers’ marketing organizations by improving training application”

Mr. Miiro researched on why thousands of smallholder farmers’ marketing organizations are not performing well despite the extensive training investments. Among the key explanations for this is the failure by trainees to apply training back to the farmers’ organization’s work setting. The study results reveal that applying training depends on trainees’ capacity, members’ collective participation in planning for the training, training methods that focus on applying training back to work, supervisors’ support, availability of resources, and the quality of mentoring from business partners of the farmers’ organizations. The study was supervised by Dr. Frank Matsiko, School of Agricultural Sciences, Makerere University and Professor Robert Mazur, Iowa State University. Financial support was received from USAID’s Agricultural Productivity Enhancement Program; The Norman E. Borlaug Leadership Enhancement in Agriculture Program; SIDA/SAREC; Iowa State University and Makerere University.

MUKWAYA Paul Isolo

“Reducing the Carbon footprint from transportation in growing cities: Application of city planning approaches in Kampala city, Uganda”

Mr. Mukwaya investigated the carbon footprint of transportation and how city planning approaches could be used to reduce it in Kampala City. Using data from a travel survey integrated with key informant interviews, results indicated that the transport landscape in Kampala is not a product of a grand master plan or design framework but a product of thousands of decisions made by several individuals and government agencies. Scenarios analyses showed that the employment creation scenario generated the highest potential to reduce CO₂ emissions from transportation in the city. Available planning institutions indicate that their existence is built on fiscal reasons with little consideration for environmental problems. For Kampala City to adopt a low carbon path from transport there is a need to increase the number of jobs generated in sub-centres and this should be reinforced by measures that improve road infrastructure and public transportation in the city. The study was supervised by Associate Professor Hannington Sengendo, Professor J.B. Nyakaana, and Professor Tom Oti of Makerere University.

“Seed production, germination, seedling growth and domestication potential of Afrocarpus usambarensis var. dawei and Podocarpus milanjanus in Sango Bay, Uganda”

Mr. Nabanyumya investigated the seed production, germination potential, on-farm seedling growth rates and potential for on-farm planting of A. usambarensis and P. milanjanus which are valuable timber trees both nationally and internationally. These species have been overharvested in Sango bay forests, which was once called a Podocarpus dominated forest. The pressure on these trees is so immense and yet there have been no efforts to plant the trees. It was found that A. usambarensis produces more seed per tree per year than P. milanjanus while A. usambarensis seeds germinate better than P. milanjanus under the same conditions. When planted on-farm, A. usambarensis has better survival and growth rate than P. milanjanus. The study has also revealed that A. usambarensis and P. milanjanus can both be grown on-farm and germinated under nursery conditions and this will aid production of seedlings for on-farm growing. The study contributes to the promotion of indigenous trees which have hitherto been endangered species in Uganda. This study opens up further research opportunities including assessment of performance of these two species under agroforestry conditions and silvicultural studies to assess the suitability of A. usambarensis and P. milanjanus for plantation forestry in Uganda. The study was supervised by Prof Joseph Obua and Dr. Susan Balaba Tumwebaze. Professor J.M Kasenene and Dr. Peter Ndemere are also acknowledged for supervising the initial stages of the study. Special appreciation to the Late Dr. W.A. Rogers for the technical and financial support.

KALIBBALA Mpagi Hebert

“Removal of Natural Organic Matter and Trihalomethanes Formation Control in Water Treatment”

Mr. Kalibbala investigated the applicability and performance of volcanic ash, pumice and Moringa as indigenous materials in the treatment of drinking water. Surface water sources naturally contain organic materials which if subjected to chlorine can result in the formation of by-products some of which have been reported to cause cancer. Therefore his study focused on how to remove the natural organic matter with minimal formation of the unwanted by-products during water treatment. He found the materials investigated to be effective in the removal of both iron and natural organic matter at pre-treatment level of drinking water. The results from the study are proven, low-cost interventions that have the potential to improve on the provision of safe water to the communities in the developing world. The study was funded by Sida and experiments were undertaken at National Water & Sewerage Corporation waterworks at Masaka and Ggaba. The supervisors were: Prof. Prof. Elzbieta Plaza, Assoc. Prof. Olle Wahlberg, Dr. Rose Kaggwa and Dr. Maimuna Nalubega

“Uncertainty Assessment in Water Balance Modeling for Lake Victoria, Makerere University, Kampala”

Mr. Kizza's research addressed issues of data quality in water balance modeling for Lake Victoria basin. Analyzing the hydrology of Lake Victoria is constrained by limitations of data in terms of quantity and quality, both of which exhibit temporal and spatial variability. A spatially detailed gridded rainfall dataset for the lake basin was derived for the lake basin. Rainfall uncertainty assessments were based on accounting for errors in land rainfall interpolation and lake rainfall regression. Catchment inflows were estimated using various techniques for analysing gauged and ungauged basins. The studies provide a platform for carrying out assessments for utilisation of water resources in Lake Victoria basin. Such studies include lake regulation for optimum hydropower production, water resource utilisation and land-use or climate change studies. The research was funded by Sida/SAREC Project.

“Strength Characterization of Timber for Building Construction in Uganda”

Mr. Zziwa investigated strength properties of 17 timbers used for building construction; proposed a timber strength classification system comprising four classes: SG4, SG8, SG12 and SG16; and developed non-destructive mechanism for predicting timber flexural behavior. The study was mainly experimental and analytical with aspects of numerical modeling using COMSOL Multi-physics. The study findings have potential to: enhance utilization of timbers on market, aid in design of structures for durability and safety purposes, increase value of lesser-known (non-traditional) timbers and consequently lead to advanced use of wood as a construction material. The non-destructive device developed is a major step towards faster non-destructive strength evaluation techniques using new NDE parameters. NORAD and Carnegie Co-operation of New York are acknowledged for funding the study. Professor J. A. Mwakali and Dr. Y.N. Ziraba are also acknowledged for supervising the study.

“Degree of Automation in the Machine Tool Driven Manufacturing Industry in Developing Countries, the Case of Uganda”

Mr. Mukasa undertook to discern the incentives and obstacles to the development of the machine tool driven manufacturing industry in a developing country. Widespread lack of global competitiveness and near stagnated growth characterised this industry. The study built models using robust indicators it developed to measure the penetration of advanced manufacturing technologies. Instrumental to investment in hardware technologies were the skills of blue collar workers, engineers and managers. Chief Executive Officers and environmental issues formed strong influences while, competitive advantage formed the strongest strategic motivation amongst Ugandan firms. In addition intangible factors presented formidable barriers to the adoption and penetration of AMT's. The study recommended policy fostering capacity building, local consumer protection and formidable labour and IPR laws. It emphasized the need for strategic choices between policies that support long term objectives associated with locally owned firms and those that support short term strategies which favour foreign owned firms.

“HIV Patient Monitoring Framework Through Knowledge Engineering”

Mr. Otine's research developed a structure of using knowledge engineering to enhance HIV patient monitoring in the Ugandan context. It was motivated by the challenge of monitoring Antiretroviral Therapy (ART) in a resource constrained setting, with high ratio of patients to care givers and need for clear strategic decision support systems for Antiretroviral drug supply management. Participatory methodology was used to develop a dimensional model for aggregating HIV data captured during ART. Drug prescription and periodic medical checks on ART patients were modelled in open source software. Analysis techniques were developed with the capability of forecasting the patient's viral load and predicting patients at risk of experiencing treatment failure with 83% accuracy. HIV/AIDS caregivers can use the tool to guide the process of monitoring patients and take remedial action when necessary. The study was supervised by Dr. Samuel Baker Kucel, Makerere University and Prof. Lena Trojer, Blekinge Institute of Technology (BTH), Sweden. We acknowledge financial support from SIDA.

“Evolution of Town Planning Ideas, Plans and their Implementation in Kampala City 1903-2004”

Mr. Omolo–Okalebo through a descriptive and exploratory approach, and by review and deduction of archival and documentary resources, supplemented by empirical evidence from case studies, traced, analysed and described the historic trajectory of town planning events in Kampala City, Uganda, since the inception of modern town planning in 1903. The study was motivated by the enormous knowledge gap on the values, ideas, ideologies and philosophies that informed planning at each epoch and how these, if implemented, have given physical expression in Kampala's urban space. The research demonstrates intellectual autonomy and disciplinary rectitude and contributes to the broad knowledge and systematic understanding of planning events since its inception. The research concludes that Planning should be based not on the imagined ideological aims of the “sophisticated” elite whose interest will very often be at variance with those of the ordinary man, but should touch and concern the real conditions and needs of people of the area in question; a need for closer coordination between economic planning and physical planning; a move towards strategic and integrated planning involving appropriate budgeting and financing.

“Geographical Information Technologies – Decision Support for Road Maintenance in Uganda”

Ms. Mazzi's research developed a Geographical Information Systems data model for road maintenance in Uganda. It was motivated by the underutilization of Geographical Information Technologies (GITs) for data collection, management, analysis and presentation in the road maintenance sector and hence focused on developing a methodological framework geared at spearheading their enhanced use. This participatory research involved stakeholders through interviews, focus group discussions, data modeling and workshops. The need of explicitly defined linear and location referencing systems and points respectively for the road network is the main conclusion from the research. The major recommendation is inclusion of a GIT policy component within the national ICT policy. The sector will benefit from evidence based prioritization of road maintenance using well-structured data from the model. Ms. Mazzi acknowledges Sida for funding together with the supervisors, professors Tickodri Togboa of Makerere and Gerhard Bax from BTH Sweden.

“Management Practices that Influence Staff Retention in Ugandan Universities”

This study set out to examine how successful Ugandan universities were at retaining their staff. Stratified sampling was carried out on three public and three private universities. A cross-sectional survey design was used in both quantitative and qualitative paradigms. It was found out that in Ugandan universities, there is a direct relationship between the management practices and staff retention. The conclusion is that the universities fail to retain their staff significantly. It was thus recommended that Ugandan universities should strictly follow their recruitment policy, increase efforts for human resource development, invigorate performance appraisal and match compensation with the current economic trends. The supervisors were Dr. James Luyonga Nkata and Assoc. Professor Joseph Oonyu. Financial support was by the Brothers of Christian Instruction.

“Developing a Framework for the Management of Distance Education Learner Support for Distance Education Learner Support for Private and Public Universities in Uganda”

Ms. Bbuye investigated distance learner support in universities in Uganda and exposed the weak systems that belie current programs. She proposed a learner support framework that emphasizes needs assessment per cohort of admitted students, timely and consistent provision of study materials, use of inbuilt interactive multimedia, coupled with in-built monitoring and evaluation mechanisms, designed to improve the quality of provision. The framework derives from responses to Interviews, questionnaires, and focus group discussion with administrators, tutors, distance education experts and students of two public and two private universities, and also documentary reviews and observations. Her work will help anchor the quality of the emerging mass higher education partly brought about by the distance education mode of provision. Great appreciation goes to SIDA SAREC, Makerere University Staff Development Unit and to the supervisors; Professor A. Tiberondwa, Professor J.C.S. Musaazi and Dr. J.L. Nkata

“Primary Education Levels attained by Women and Perceived Quality of Life in Rural Households of Nyarurambi Parish, Kabale District, South Western Uganda”

Ms Begumisa explored how to better understand the role of the knowledge, skills, values and attitudes attained at the different levels of formal primary education in improving the quality of life of the households in Nyarurambi Parish. The study was motivated by the fact that quality of life of the households in rural areas has become an issue of concern in least developed nations. A total of 40 respondents participated in interviews, observation as well as focus group discussions in this research. The study concludes the importance of formal primary education towards quality of life. It also shows the consequence of people applying the knowledge and skills taught at the FPE level, and the need to make quality of life part of the curriculum and the significance of teachers and pupils to conducting practical lessons in the home setting and surrounding areas where the QOL will be lived and also to use resource persons from the community.

“The Role of Stakeholders and its Implications on the Internal Efficiency of the Universal Primary Education Programme in Eastern Uganda”.

Mr. Itaaga studied the role of selected stakeholders and its implications on the internal efficiency of the UPE programme in Eastern Uganda. The study adopted a cross-sectional survey design. It revealed that the activities undertaken by the selected stakeholders have not been adequate to benefit all schools particularly those in rural areas; several schools and pupils lack the necessary pedagogical and non-pedagogical inputs for effective learning. There was gross wastage of resources as a result of the high internal inefficiency due to socio-economic underpinnings and high opportunity cost of schooling. All education stakeholders must spearhead the operationalisation of the UPE programme and address the socio-economic dynamics that have affected the efficiency of the programme. The supervisors were Dr. Mugagga Anthony and Dr. Tamale Maurice. The study was funded by the Carnegie Small Grants Project Phase I.

MUSISI Badru

“The Competitive Secondary Education Market and its Pedagogic Ramifications”

Mr. Musisi examined the pernicious educational outcomes engendered by the way schools compete in Uganda’s secondary education market. He focussed on for-profit schools serving affluent, middle income, and poor households. Using qualitative methodology, he explored the purposeful, observable, and specific moves schools make to meet their business agenda, and how these moves shape the learning outcomes. School managers, education officers, UNEB examiners, learners, and alumni of selected schools participated in the study. He established that the way for-profit schools compete augments little knowledge of lasting value, which undermines the production of the prolific human capital envisaged by education policy reformers. He thus, urges MOES to strengthen the inspection, supervision, and advisory support mechanisms, otherwise, the expansion of secondary education is a misspent investment if schools are left to drift into counterproductive competitive behaviour. The study was supervised by Prof. Awolabi Olajide (RIP), School of Education Makerere University and Dr. Nkote Isaac Makerere University Business School.

“Exploring the Teaching and Testing of Learners’ German Language Communicative Abilities in Secondary Schools in Uganda”

Mr. Sekiziyivu’s research focused on the teaching and testing of learners’ German language communicative abilities in secondary schools in Uganda. The study was inspired by the persistent inability of presumed very good learners’ of German to perform well in real-life communication. Using both qualitative and quantitative approaches/methods to data collection and analysis’ the study explored the situation of German teaching in Uganda based on the principles of communicative language teaching and testing. The findings exposed the challenges of teaching and testing a foreign language in a country like Uganda where the provision of a real life-like situation was unfeasible and then suggested possible solutions. The supervisors were Assoc. Prof. Dr. Mugimu Christopher and Dr. Ssekitto Ayoub. The study was funded by Makerere University staff development and Sida SAREC.

“Attitudes, Gender and Socio-Economic Status as Correlates of Mathematical Creativity of Secondary Students in Uganda”

Mrs. Sholy’s research was on the correlation of attitude towards mathematics, gender and socio-economic status with the mathematical creativity of the secondary students in Central Uganda. The quantitative analysis of the study revealed that components of mathematical creativity like fluency, flexibility and originality are significantly different for high and low attitude towards mathematics students. The study also found that there are significant gender differences in mathematical creativity. Mathematical creativity differs significantly for high and low socio economic status students, high socio economic status students scoring higher for mathematical creativity. The research further revealed that students from different SES have different classroom environment, learning methods and home conditions. Teaching methods and teacher inspirations also were different. This contributed to wide differences in mathematical creativity among the secondary students in Uganda. This research work was completed under the guidance of Associate Prof. Charles Opolot Okurut and Dr. Janet Kaahwa of the Department of Science, Technical and Vocational Education (DSTVE) of Makerere University, Kampala.

“Pay, Organizational Support, and Affective Organizational Commitment in Makerere University”

Mr. Kafuuma investigated the extent to which pay (salary, allowances and fringe benefits) and organisational support (promotional chances, staff autonomy, distributive justice, staff involvement in decisions, prompt communication and supervisory support) correlate with staff and organizational commitment in Makerere University. The study findings show that both variables have a significant positive but moderate relationship with organizational commitment. The study recommends that pay reviews and policies on pension, leave and related organizational support issues and processes should be organically taken, involving departments. Departments should involve staff in decisions and should employ more viable communication systems for prompt information dissemination. Further research should focus on the influence of individual and environmental variables on staff organizational commitment; and the contribution of continuance and normative commitments to overall staff organizational commitment in Makerere University. Supervisors were: Prof J. C. S. Musaazi and Dr. Joseph Oonyu.

MPOZA Johnbaptist

“Performance Appraisal System and Career Development of Academic Staff of Public Universities in Uganda.”

Mr. Mpoza John Baptist delved into the relationship between appraisal and the career development of academic staffs in Uganda’s public universities. The goal of the study was to ascertain whether career stagnation among the universities’ academic staffs has been due to the way their performance and competencies are appraised. Using questionnaires and interview, he collected data from Kyambogo University, Makerere University and Mbarara University of Science and Technology. The findings were that the methods the universities use to appraise their academic staffs have potential for promoting the staffs’ career development. However, the staffs’ careers are stagnating because: the staffs are not directly involved in the setting of their performance targets; and the processes through which they are appraised are not fully transparent. Therefore, he recommends more direct involvement of the staffs in the setting of their performance targets and in the appraisal of the extent to which they achieve these targets. Mr. Mpoza John Baptist was supervised by Professor J. C. S. Musaazi and Doctor J. L. Nkata.

NAMUTEBI Edith (Ms)

“Employee Procurement and Training Policies and Diversity Management in Universities in Uganda”

Namutebi investigated the relationship between observance of employee recruitment, selection and training policies and diversity management in universities in Uganda. Using questionnaires and document analysis, data were collected from staffs of 11 of these universities. Her findings were that although all the universities have policies for procuring and training employees, these policies are not fully observed—leading to imbalances in the employees’ gender, nationalities, age, religion and marital status. The poor observance of the policies was found to be due to violation of the universities’ managerial autonomy, dysfunctional HRM practices, universities’ cultures and corruption. Therefore, she recommends outsourcing of employee procurement services, elimination of non-merit employee selection criterion and deterrence of university owners from interfering with the universities’ staff procurement and training practices. This work was supervised by Professor J. C. S. Musaazi and Dr. J. L. Nkata.

“The Effects of Decentralized Governance System on Primary Teachers’ Personnel Management Functions in Mukono District –Uganda”.

The Study investigated the recruitment, retention and exit functions management of teachers under the decentralized governance System in Mukono District. A total of 434 respondents were contacted. The findings indicated that the recruitment function management greatly affected the quality of teachers; most retention functions management exhibited unreadiness but eager to learn, the retirement function management totally left teachers unattended to. Hence recommended regional recruitment panels, Continuous research to ascertain professionalism in the teachers’ retention functions management and also complete transfer of the retirement function management to the district. Teachers’ Trade union was greatly encouraged. In this study I was supervised by Dr. J. L.Nkanta and Prof. N.A Maicibi. The Study was funded by me and Makerere University.

“Organisational Culture and the Management of Universities in Uganda”

Ms. Zziwa examined how organisational cultures affect the management of universities in Uganda. The research was motivated by the need to have well managed universities which can withstand the era of differentiation and expansion. A sample of 361 university staff from 11 universities participated in this research. The research findings indicated that the management of universities is significantly affected by organisational structures, leadership, and employee expectations. The research concludes the importance of adopting a combination of organisational structural models in organisation of universities. Further, it brings out the importance of training university leaders in leadership skills and also the significance of attracting and retaining more intellectuals. The researcher recognises insightful suggestions of Professor J.C.S. Musaazi and Dr. L.J.Nkata (supervisors); Dr. Dan Babigumira, Dr. James Urwick and Dr. A. Mugagga (Doctoral Committee members).

MAFABI Samuel

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

NKUNDABANYANGA Stephen

“Board Governance, Intellectual Capital and Firm performance”.

Mr. Nkundabanyanga undertook a study to establish the relationship between board governance, intellectual capital and firm performance and, the mediating effect of board role performance on board governance and performance in Ugandan services sector firms; Nkundabanyanga developed a coherent model directed at improving firm performance. Following a positivist view of testing pre-specified hypotheses he then used Structural Equation Modelling with Analysis of Moment Structures for statistical modelling and findings suggest that board governance, intellectual capital and board role performance as a mediator account for significant variances in services sector firms’ performance. One of the most significant contributions of his thesis is the finding that what make boards effective are not rules and regulations, usually espoused in codes of best practice and local regulations but whether they (boards) are performing the tasks for which they were hired – making an important contribution to extant literature in that the results provide a benchmark for stakeholders wishing to leverage the use of their boards by emphasising task/role performance and offering specific ways to manage and leverage intellectual capital by the board.
