The Makerere University College of Veterinary Medicine is transforming the way it is doing its mandate to reposition itself to meet the emerging development challenges.

According to Professor David Kabasa, the Principal College of Veterinary Medicine and bio- security at Makerere University, the College has established a platform upon which various communities have been trained with skills that economically empower beneficiaries.

He says that the challenges facing the college require the university to draw new agenda towards transformative science, technology, innovations, learning and development services for Uganda's socio-economic transformation.

The aim and objective of Makerere University's intervention is to contribute to the national development plan to foster prosperity in the country especially the youth who need sustainable skills.

The principal reveals that repositioned as Africa's leading University, the college of veterinary medicine is focused at securing, the well being of animals and the holistic use of the economic opportunities emanating from the animal world.
