“Public Expenditure and Economic Growth in Sub-Saharan Africa”

Employing panel data techniques in a panel of 43 countries (1980-2007), the researcher sought to explore whether it is public expenditure that promotes Economic growth or it is Economic growth which induces public spending. Unidirectional causality is found to run from per capita income to per capita expenditure at 1% significance level. This implies that population control can improve both per capita GDP and per capita expenditure. Secondly the study explored existence of convergence in public expenditure and economic growth. Panel convergence fails in both cases except that trade openness and natural resources were significant in the economic convergence in sub-panel analysis. Therefore promoting trade openness and use of natural recourses efficiently and sustainably is vital for Sub-Saharan Africa. The researcher also estimated functional expenditure effect on Economic growth. Differential effects were established but with defense expenditure consistently exhibiting a negative impact in all models used. Given the budget constraint, countries ought to re-allocate some resources from defense to growth enhancing expenditures. The study was supervised by Prof. John Ddumba-Ssentamu and Assoc. Prof. Eria Hisali.

“Household Food Security Assessment Using Logistic and Rasch Models: A Case Study of Tororo and Busia Districts”

FAO Integrated Food Security Phase Classification method of food security assessment used in Uganda is qualitative and subjective. The scientific approaches like nutrition calorific-intake of UNECA, econometric model of the World Bank are expensive. Rasch Model is cost effective but uni-dimensional. This study shows that a better food security classification of households is realized when using a hybrid multi-dimensional logit model. The assessment involved factor analysis, logit models, and the Classical Rasch model. The major contribution of this study is introduction of hybrid dependent variable in the logit models leading to a higher percentage (89.7%) of correctly classified households compared to other food insecurity proxies (75% to 82% correctly classified households). The study was supervised by Dr. Leonard Atuhaire, Dr. Fabian Nabugoomu, and Dr. Elijah Muwanga-Zake. Research funding was obtained from the Carnegie Corporation for Research Funding.
