College of Computing and Information Sciences

The Principal, College of Computing and Information Sciences to present the following for the Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Information science)

NAIBOKA Nora (Ms)

“Assessing participatory development communication as a strategy for Agricultural Information dissemination in Uganda”

Ms. Naiboka investigated the strategies to effectively disseminate scientifically validated agricultural information to small scale farmers. Study objectives were achieved through a review of an IDRC funded Participatory Development Communication (PDC) initiative implemented in Uganda by banana researchers from the National Agriculture Research Organisation (NARO) between 2001 and 2007. Farmers’ views were paramount in the study which established that PDC is a dynamic information dissemination approach with potential to co-opt available opportunities, and to mobilize and coordinate stakeholders towards the achievement of desired objectives. Consequently, the study recommends that the Ministry of Agriculture Animal Industry and Fisheries of Uganda (MAAIF) should appraise PDC for countrywide utilisation.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy (Information science)

BUKIRWA Joyce Nyumba (Ms)

Ms. Bukirwa examined the management of grey literature, a special and unique source of information for teaching, learning and research. The study was motivated by the fact that University libraries were faced with challenges related to management of grey literature, leading to its inaccessibility. The researcher examined the state of management of grey literature in university libraries in Uganda; established how grey literature was used; identified the associated challenges and propose a framework for improved management of grey literature for enhanced access in university libraries in Uganda. A multiple-case replication study design involving five university libraries was used and data collected using interview, questionnaire, tools analysis, and document review and observation methods. The study revealed general absence of streamlined mechanisms for collecting grey literature. Libraries used conventional methods and tools which did not allow exhaustive processing search, retrieval and therefore, access to the collection. The study proposed a framework comprising a registry of grey literature generating activities, an Integrated Grey Literature Information System and a Grey Literature Access Interface. Strengthening or developing institutional repositories, electronic submission of theses and dissertations, grey literature legal deposit policies and digitization are some of the critical areas of intervention, proposed to realize better access to grey literature in Uganda university libraries.
