ATUHAIRE Andrew Mwebaze

Improving nutritive quality of maize stover for enhancing productivity of smallholder dairy farms

Mr. Atuhaire Andrew's research focused on nutritional improvement of maize stover to address dairy cattle nutritional challenges during the dry season. He found that using consortia of edible mushroom Pleurotus sajor caju, indigenous microbiota Lactobacillus plantarum and sugar cane molasses on maize stover unlocks the lignin barrier, rendering nutrients available for rumen fermentation and post rumen digestion. Biological treatment of maize stover improves utilization efficiency, milk yield and fatty acid composition. The research established that biological treatment of maize stover provides alternative quality feed resource, ecologically sustainable, economically feasible and socially acceptable on smallholder Dairy farms in Uganda. This study was funded by National Agricultural Research Organization (NARO) and East African Agricultural Productivity project (EAAPP), and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Samuel Okello, Assoc. Prof. Fred Kabi and Dr. Swidiq Mugerwa.

MUTEBI Francis

Epidemiology, morbidity and treatment of zoonotic animal tungiasis in rural Uganda

Dr. Mutebi Francis researched on the role of animals in the spread of jiggers (tungiasis) among humans, impact of jiggers on animal health and their treatment in rural Uganda.

His study demonstrated for the first time that in rural Uganda both animals (especially pigs, dogs, cats and goats) and humans get infected by "similar" jiggers and infection of animals increases the burden and severity of human infections. His study showed that animals too suffer from a severe disease due to jiggers. He further demonstrated that some commercial insecticides (e.g. Supona® external spray) can be used to successfully treat jiggers in animals. His findings therefore highlighted a need to treat animals as an integral strategy in jigger control campaigns in Uganda. This study was funded by Bayer HealthCare and German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), and supervised by Prof. Georg von Samson-Himmelstjerna, Prof. Herman Feldmeier, Prof. Charles Waiswa and Dr. Jürgen Krücken.

NABATANZI Alice (Ms)

Phytochemical, nutraceutical and nutritive properties of priority wild edible plants constituting diets of pregnant women in Buikwe District, Uganda

Ms. Nabatanzi's research focused on improving household food and nutrition security of the marginalised rural pregnant women by targeting wild edible plants as a sustainable solution to dietary nutrient inadequencies experienced by pregnant women. She measured the phytochemical, nutraceutical and nutritive values of the five priority species (Nsugga nzirugavu, Katunkuma, Amatungulu, Ntuntunu and Jobyo) and ascertained the contribution of the measured values to the pregnancy Recommended Dietary Intakes. Her findings justified the nutraceutical significance of the five wild edible plants and their ability to meet the maternal and foetal pregnancy nutrient requirements. This study was funded by Carnegie

Corporation of New York through RISE-AFNNET, and was supervised by Prof. John David Kabasa and Dr. Immaculate Nakalembe.

SAIMO-KAHWA Margaret (Ms)

Vaccine potential of R. appendiculatus salivary gland cement and gut specific proteins for the control of ticks and tick-borne diseases in cattle in sub-Saharan Africa

Dr. Saimo-Kahwa Margaret researched on the brown ear ticks' salivary gland cement protein (Trp64) secreted during tick feeding and the midgut tick protein (Ra86), as potential vaccine candidates that can be developed into a subunit vaccine to control ticks and tick-borne diseases. She immunized rabbits with a combination of the tick proteins and challenged them with the different stages of brown ear ticks. The study resulted in death of some ticks, lower tick attachment, inhibited egg hatching, lower molting of larvae and nymphs. The results demonstrate the potential of the tick proteins in reducing tick infestation by developing a vaccine to control the brown ear tick, which is the vector for East Coast Fever. This creates an opportunity to eliminate the concern of tick acaricide resistance and increasing cost of treating tick-borne diseases. This study was funded partly by Netherlands Organization for Scientific Research, WOTRO, International consortium for ticks and tick-borne diseases (ICTTD-3), EU INCO-DEV, BecA-ILRI and Makerere University, and supervised by Prof. Michael Ocaido and Assoc. Prof. Enock Matovu.

ANGEYO Jennifer Somali (Ms)

On the application of machine learning in legislative drafting practices in Uganda

Ms. Angeyo Jennifer Somali examined the applicability of machine learning in legislative drafting practices in Uganda. The factual, societal, political, legal and socio economic factors that affect legislative drafting practices in the country were analysed. To suggest ways of ensuring these factors are evaluated and accommodated before a bill is discussed and passed by the legislature, machine learning algorithms for binary classification is presented as a tool to support decision making. Supervised learning algorithms from the learning domains of functions, distance metric (lazy), decision tree, ensemble, and Bayes were investigated on Matlab and WEKA Software using legislative drafting data sets. The classification models proposed narrow the gap in decision making and provide a good support for evaluating the extent to which environmental factors affecting a given bill(s) at a given time have been accommodated. This study was self-funded and supervised by Dr Peter Jehopio.

AYOO Philip Ouma

A framework for developing and sharing constructivist e-learning resources

Mr. Ayoo Philip Ouma's research investigated how constructivist theoretical principles could guide the development of e-learning systems, and how resources made available in the digital learning environment may be shared within the context of higher education. Through two surveys within 54 universities in East Africa, a list of requirements were elicited, whereupon Unified Modelling Language (UML) was used to provide the notation for the modeling. The resultant framework shows how various processes interrelate to facilitate e-learning resources sharing. Within the framework, guidelines are provided for the incorporation of constructivist principles in the development of sharable e-learning resources, with emphasis on relevant learning theories, pedagogy, motivation, quality assurance, and stakeholder identification and involvement. Whereas the framework has been developed within the context of East Africa, it is generic and can be adapted to facilitate development and sharing of e-learning resources in any other developing country. This study was self-funded, and was supervised by Prof. Jude T Lubega.

BANAGA-BAINGI Gerald

The pass-through of international oil price to the domestic consumer fuel prices in Uganda

Mr. Banaga-Baingi examined the pass-through of international oil price to the domestic consumer fuel prices in Uganda. The study analyses three related issues; the key determinants of fuel prices; the impact of private agent's profit margins on fuel pricing and the oil price pass-through in this environment. The study finds that, oil price, exchange rate and the private agent's operating margins are significant determining factors of fuel prices. Government duty and consumer demand have less effect. The study also finds that the oil price pass-through is less than unitary and this is explained by the market inefficiencies and the private agents desire to derive higher operating margins. Development of an anti-competition framework, a wholesale market and improving energy security are instrumental in pacifying the market, reducing the incentive for agents to raise and maintain high fuel prices and improving the oil price pass-through. This study was self-funded and supervised by Dr. John K Mutenyoo and Dr. Tom Mwebaze.

KABAGENYI Allen (Ms)

High fertility rates in Uganda: is low contraceptive prevalence responsible?

Ms. Kabagenyi investigated whether there is stalled fertility in Uganda and sought to explain the low contraceptive prevalence and high fertility levels. Her research showed no evidence of a fertility stall for the period 1973-2011, challenging the notion that socio-economic growth stalls fertility. Also, low contraceptive use was not the sole predictor of persistent high births, but a combination of education, age at marriage, age of respondents and partner characteristics. Furthermore, the study established negative misconceptions and beliefs related to low use of modern contraception including: fear of side effects, stigma associated with use, domestic violence, preference for large families and polygamy. At the health facilities, regular stock-out, limited choices, partner opposition and lack of provider expertise were barriers to Family Planning utilization. The study recommended education of females beyond secondary, late entry of females into marriage, small family size, training more health workers, and use of effective contraception would reduce the high fertility rates. This study was funded by Wellcome Trust / THRiVE and Carnegie Corporation of New York, and supervised by Prof. James M. Ntozi, Assoc. Prof. Lynn Atuyambe, and Dr. Alice Reid.

WANDERA Stephen Ojiambo

Disparities in health and access to healthcare among older persons in Uganda

Mr. Wandera Stephen Ojiambo studied the disparities in health and access to healthcare among older persons in Uganda, using the 2010 Uganda National Household Survey data and interviews among older persons, healthcare providers and community workers from Hoima, Kiboga and Busia districts. He found that older persons' poverty, mobility challenges, and health system barriers hindered access to healthcare. The health system barriers included unavailability of drugs for NCDs, staff trained in geriatrics, specialized equipment and services; the long queues; poor handling by health providers, and long distances. To improve healthcare access, there is need to strengthen the healthcare system to address the non-communicable diseases among older persons in Uganda. This study was funded by the Consortium for Advanced Research Training in Africa (CARTA), the Carnegie Corporation of New York, and the Germany Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), and supervised by Prof. James Ntozi and Dr. Betty Kwagala.

NAMARA Suleiman

Primary school child dropout, interschool movements and progression in Uganda

Mr. Namara's study analysed the factors that affect primary school child dropout, interschool movements and progression in Uganda's Universal Primary Education System using the 2005/06 - 2009/10 panel data set. The study found that the age of the child, the family structure and walking distance affects dropout. Sex of the child and the location of the household were found to explain interschool movement. Income status of the household, access to electricity and children who move from public to private schools were found more likely to progress. The level of father's education was found to explain dropout, interschool movement and progression. The study will benefit policy formulation at the Ministry of Education and Sports in improving the attainment of the Uganda's Universal Primary Education Policy Objectives. This study was funded by the World Bank and supervised by Assoc. Prof. Eria Hissali and Assoc. Prof. Edward Baale.

ANDIA Irene Biraro (Ms)

The impact of co-infections and the effect of isoniazid preventive therapy on immune responses in household contacts exposed to sputum smear positive tuberculosis in Uganda

Dr. Andia Irene Biraro investigated the impact of co-infections such as malaria, worms and HIV on increasing the risk of getting infected with the non-clinical form of tuberculosis (latent tuberculosis) among household members living with patients diagnosed with tuberculosis disease. These co-infections are able to avoid destruction in the body by changing someone's immunity to suit their survival. In so doing, they compromise the body's immunity needed to protect against tuberculosis. The findings showed that the co-infections did not increase the risk of getting latent tuberculosis, however those that had a BCG scar had reduced risk of acquiring latent tuberculosis. The study also looked at the effect of using isoniazid preventive therapy to treat household contacts with latent tuberculosis and found that the treatment was effective but more work is needed to show how long this effect lasts. This study was funded by Wellcome Trust Strategic Award and the European Community's Seventh Framework Programme, and supervised by Dr Achilles Katamba, Dr Steven G Smith, Prof. Moses Joloba, and Prof. Alison Elliott.

GALUKANDE Moses

Breast cancer: molecular subtypes, risk factors, delays in diagnosis and survival experiences at Mulago Hospital, Uganda

Dr. Galukande Moses investigated breast cancer molecular subtypes, risk factors, delays in seeking treatment, and survival among women in Uganda. The study revealed an over representation of poor prognosis breast cancer molecular subtypes. Breast-feeding was a protective factor against breast cancer. There were excessive delays of over 12 months from noticing symptoms to seeking appropriate medical care. Thirty per cent of women who sought care did not return after the initial contact to complete treatment, while over 75% of women presented with late disease. The 5-year survival was much lower than other societies. However, the 5-year survival rate of the few that presented with early stage disease very high. The findings provide opportunities to reduce breast cancer related mortality and the need to fill the knowledge gaps. This study was funded by THRiVE/WELCOMER TRUST and ADDRf and supervised by Prof. Henry Wabinga, Assoc. Prof. Florence Mirembe, other mentors included Prof. Alexander Asea and Prof. Mike Stratton.

KAJUBI Phoebe (Ms)

Communication practices of children on antiretroviral therapy and the role of family situations, Jinja District, Uganda: variations and tensions

Ms. Kajubi Phoebe explored HIV-infected children's knowledge and communication practices regarding their diagnosis and Antiretroviral Therapy and the role of family situations in shaping the communication. The study involved HIV-infected children aged 8-17 years and their caregivers in Jinja District, Uganda. Her research revealed that children's knowledge of HIV diagnosis and purpose of the medicines is low. Only half of the study children knew that they were taking medicines for HIV. The study revealed further that communication between caregivers and children about HIV medicines is infrequent, constrained and is characterized by tension. Her work provides valuable information to guide policy on interventions that support caregivers to communicate messages on diagnosis and treatment to HIV-infected children. This study was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Anne Katahoire, Prof. Susan Reynolds Whyte and Dr. David Kyaddondo, and was funded by the Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

KAKAIRE Othman

Intrauterine contraception among women living with HIV/Aids in Uganda

Dr. Kakaire Othman investigated the safety and acceptability of intrauterine contraception among HIV positive women. His study was shaped by the need to prevent the high prevalence of unwanted pregnancies among women in HIV/AIDS care. The findings showed that intrauterine contraception is safe, acceptable and at one year of use, the continuation rate is very high. His research advanced our understanding of the clinical performance of intrauterine contraception among HIV positive users. The study recommends that intrauterine contraception should be made available in HIV/AIDS care settings. This will increase contraceptive choices for HIV positive women and reduce the burden of unwanted pregnancies among women in HIV/AIDS care. This study was funded by the Medical Education for Equitable Services to All Ugandans (MESAU) and the Swedish International Development Agency, Swedish Research Council (SIDA/VR), and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Josaphat K Byamugisha, Assoc. Prof. Nazarius M Tumwesigye and Prof. Kristina Gemzell-Danielsson.

Cerebral palsy in Mulago Hospital, Uganda: comorbidity, diagnosis and cultural adaptation of an assessment tool

Dr. Kakooza-Mwesige Angelina determined the neurological, nutritional and brain imaging findings of Ugandan children with cerebral palsy (CP) and developed a culturally relevant assessment tool for measuring their functional performance. She found a higher proportion of children with the severe type of CP that involves stiffness of all four limbs, frequent co-existence of malnutrition, learning disability, epilepsy and markedly different brain image patterns with those seen in high income countries. Her work suggests a different clinical panorama of CP in Ugandan children whose cause seems to be as result of a higher occurrence of lack of oxygenation and other complications during birth or acquired infections after birth. The majority of these causes is preventable and makes a strong argument for policy implication in the improvement of emergency obstetric and postnatal care. This study was funded by Belgian Technical Cooperation (BTC), Karolinska Institute, African Doctoral Dissertation Research Fellowship, and Foundation Frimurarna Barnhuset, Swedish Research Council; and was supervised by Profs. Effect of repeated anthelmintic treatment on malaria in school children in Kenya: a randomized, open label, equivalence trial

Dr. Kepha Stella investigated the impact of repeated deworming on the risk of clinical malaria among school children in western Kenya. The purpose of the study was to better understand the impact of deworming on malaria and soil transmitted helminthes (STH), and epidemiology of malaria among school children. The study demonstrated STH infections are still prevalent, despite the ongoing national deworming programme in Kenya, malaria parasitaemia is widespread, such that coinfection of malaria and STH occurs among a significant proportion of children. Finally repeated deworming does not alter risk of clinical malaria or malaria parasitaemia among school children and suggests that school-based deworming in Africa may have no adverse consequences for malaria. This study was funded by THRIVE and IDEA consortia and supervised by Prof Fred Nuwaha and Prof Simon Brooker.

KIGUBA Ronald

Pharmacoepidemiology of medication errors and suspected adverse drug reactions in the Ugandan Health Care System

Mr. Kiguba Ronald evaluated the pharmacovigilance system in Uganda, specifically, the attitudes and practices of healthcare professionals (HCPs) towards the recognition and reporting of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) and medication errors (MEs). He established that patient ADR-complaint in the previous month was a dominant factor in the recognition of suspected ADRs and most HCPs valued patient involvement in ME reporting. Previous-year ADR reporting was higher at hospital-level staff and in medicine, but lower for private for-profit health facilities. He observed an extensive antibiotic prescription rate in Mulago National Referral Hospital, with rampant missed-dose days, the first day was the most abused; and a high risk of suspected ADRs linked to the use of ceftriaxone, levofloxacin and metronidazole that are safe. Empowering patients to communicate ADR-complaints to HCPs or directly to relevant medication safety bodies can promote medication safety. The hospitals need to sort out the logistical bottlenecks that cause inpatients to delay initiation or miss continuation of prescribed medications. This study was funded by THRiVE, African Population and Health Research centre and supervised by Prof. Paul Waako, Assoc. Prof. Charles Karamagi, and Prof. Sheila Bird.

Maternal and newborn care practices in Masindi and Kiryandongo Districts of western Uganda: effect of home visits and mobile phone consultations by village health workers

Dr. Mangwi Ayiasi Richard evaluated the effect of home visits made by Village Health Teams (VHT) using mobile phone consultations among women in Masindi and Kiryandongo Districts. His study revealed that current antenatal care implementation does not prepare women to become better carers for their pregnancy and newborn babies because it focused on specific disease programmes such as HIV/AIDS and Malaria control and immunization paid less attention to maternal nutrition or newborn care. He proposes an alternative antenatal care model which effectively reaches communities through Village Health Team members who are equipped with mobile phones to conduct home visits and make further consultations with skilled health workers. This model was found to have positive effect on health seeking behaviour such as delivery in the health facility and early care-seeking for the sick newborn baby. This study was funded by the Belgian Government through the Institute of Tropical Medicine in Antwerp and supervised by Professor Christopher Garimoi Orach, Professor Bart Criel and Professor Patrick Kolsteren.

Demand-creation for couples' HIV counseling and testing among married or cohabiting individuals in Rakai, Uganda: Trends, motivations, barriers and intervention outcomes

Mr. Joseph Matovu's research aimed at developing an intervention to improve HIV counseling and testing among couples in Rakai, south-western Uganda. The study found low levels of couples' HIV testing. An intervention was developed to engage married individuals in small group, interactive sessions reinforced with testimonies from previously tested couples. Study findings show that individuals who were reached by the intervention were more likely to test with their partners than their counterparts. These findings will inform the implementation of the National Couples' HIV Counseling and Testing Strategy. MEYA David Bisagaya

Immunopathogenesis of immune reconstitution inflammatory syndrome secondary to central nervous system infections in HIV-infected patients

Dr. Meya David Bisagaya studied the function of the immune system in HIV-infected patients with meningitis caused by a fungus. He sought to understand why one third of patients treated for this meningitis tend to get worse after starting Antiretroviral drugs. His findings suggest that, despite the immune system improving after starting Antiretroviral drugs, the immune system sends certain types of cells to the brain that are abnormally active, causing recurrence of the symptoms of meningitis even in the absence of the actual fungus. He identified these cells and how they function. His work has enabled scientists to understand what happens in those patients who seem to get worse after treatment for fungal meningitis and who initiate Antiretroviral drugs. The findings will be useful in developing treatment for patients with fungal meningitis who get worse after starting Antiretroviral drugs. This study was funded by THRiVE/WELCOME TRUST and supervised by Prof. Moses Joloba, Prof. Yuka Manabe, Dr. Steve Cose and Prof. Edward Janoff.

MWESIGIRE Doris (Ms)

Quality of life in HIV patients attending an urban clinic in Uganda: a cohort study

Dr. Mwesigire Doris studied how the availability of antiretroviral therapy has transformed HIV into a chronic illness, and people living with HIV can now live longer; and she also studied quality of their life and how it changes over time. She found the following to negatively affect quality of life: not receiving antiretroviral therapy, having depression, old age, late disease stage, female gender, other infections, none or low level of education and consumption of alcohol. Patients on antiretroviral therapy have better quality of life compared to those who are not on therapy. However, patients on antiretroviral therapy require more psychosocial support to improve their mental health. The current first line treatment drugs had comparable quality of life scores. Change in CD4 cell count does not reflect change in quality of life. Despite the depiction of good quality of life from the patient narratives, they still suffer from stigma, non-disclosure and uncertainty about the future that may negatively affect quality of life. This study was funded by THRiVE/WELCOME TRUST and supervised by Dr. Achilles Katamba and Prof. Janet Seeley.

Antibody responses elicited by the ASO4-adjuvanted HPV 16/18 vaccine among girls aged 10-16 years in Western Uganda

Dr. Nakalembe Miriam investigated antibody responses elicited by the cervical cancer vaccine among girls aged 10-16 years in western Uganda. Her study was motivated by the high burden of cervical cancer in the country with little progress in secondary prevention. The findings showed that the vaccine was highly immunogenic hence generating confidence in the cervical cancer vaccine in Uganda where there were concerns that prevalent immune compromising infections (HIV, helminths and malaria) may affect the immune response to the vaccine. The study supports continued use of the cervical cancer vaccines at the primary level of cervical cancer prevention. This study was funded by the Millennium Scientific Initiative World Bank grant through the Uganda National Council for Science and Technology, THRiVE-Grant and the Makerere University Staff Development; and supervised by Assoc. Prof. Florence M. Mirembe, Dr. Cecily Banura and Prof. Deborah Money.

Improving stroke prevention and outcome in Uganda: population survey and hospital based study

Dr. Nakibuuka Jane studied risk factors for stroke and stroke outcomes in Uganda with the purpose of obtaining information on the critical determinants for stroke prevention and management in order to develop strategies to prevent stroke and improve survival after a stroke. The study found very high death and disability from stroke especially in patients with the severe forms, but a simplified stroke focused care package improves survival of patients with severe stroke. The commonest risk factors for stroke in Uganda such as hypertension, overweight and obesity can be prevented or controlled. The findings will inform public health workers and clinicians to design evidence based strategies to prevent stroke among people with high risk. It will also inform policy on stroke prevention and management. This study was funded by MESAU-MEPI-CVD PhD program and supervised by Prof.

Improving diagnosis of Tuberculosis among HIV-infected patients in Uganda

Dr. Nakiyingi Lydia's study purposed to develop strategies for improved tuberculosis (TB) testing and recognition among people infected with HIV/AIDS. The current methods used to test for TB in Uganda often miss the disease in patients who have HIV/AIDS, often resulting into deaths. Among the strategies, a new rapid and cheap TB test on urine, called the urine TB lipoarabinomannan test, was found to perform much better in patients with advanced HIV/AIDS than the current methods. The findings will benefit clinicians treating HIV-infected patients and the policy makers at the Ministry of Health who should change TB management guidelines to include this new urine test for testing TB among patients with advanced HIV/AIDS. This study was funded by MEPI-MESAU PhD program and supervised by Prof. Yukari Manabe, Prof. Harriet Mayanja-Kizza, Prof. Moses Joloba and Prof. Damalie Nakanjako.

Antimicrobial self-Medication in post-conflict Northern Uganda: implications in Chloroquine and Artemisinin genotypic resistance in the community

Dr. Ocan Moses investigated antimicrobial self-medication in post-conflict northern Uganda and its implications on chloroquine and artemisinin resistance in the community. The study found that the prevalence of antimicrobial self-medication in communities of northern Uganda was twice that in other low and middle-income countries (LMICs). A third of the households stored antimicrobial agents while a third of the patients used antibacterial agents prior to hospital visit. The predictors of antimicrobial self-medication included gender (female), drug knowledge, reading drug leaflets, advice from friends, previous experience, long waiting time in the hospitals, and distance to health facilities. Reversal in chloroquine resistance and emergence of artemisinin resistance were detected in the Plasmodium falciparum parasites in northern Uganda. The study was funded by MESAU-MEPI consortium and supervised by Prof. Celestino Obua, Prof. Jasper Ogwal-Okeng and Dr. Freddie Bwanga.

Sulfadoxine-Pyrimethamine for malaria prevention during pregnancy: knowledge, use patterns and trimester-specific pharmacokinetic analysis among Ugandan women

The antimalarial drug Sulfadoxine-pyrimethamine (Fansidar) is used to prevent malaria during pregnancy. Dr. Odongo's study investigated whether physiologic changes due to pregnancy would necessitate dose adjustments in early and late pregnancy. He also investigated the influence of pregnancy status on drug choice for malaria treatment. Physiologic changes did not alter the way the body handled Fansidar in early or late pregnancy, but variations in the way the body handled Fansidar was noted. Women more often used Fansidar for treatment of malaria when pregnant, and switched to artemisinin products when not pregnant. The study recommends that dose adjustments are not required when Fansidar is given in early or late pregnancy, but antenatal care providers should endeavor to educate women on the distinction between malaria treatment and prevention, and the correct medicines for each condition. This study was funded by the MEPI-MESAU consortium and supervised by Prof. Celestino Obua, Prof. Josaphat Byamugisha and Prof. Muhammad Ntale.

Management of postpartum haemorrhage in rural Uganda: perceptions, risk factors, and effectiveness of antenatal distribution of Misoprostol to women to self-administer after childbirth

Postpartum haemorrhage is responsible for one quarter of all the maternal deaths in Uganda. Dr Ononge Sam investigated the management of postpartum haemorrhage in rural Uganda; perceptions, risk factors and effectiveness of antenatal distribution of misoprostol to women for self-administration after childbirth. He found a third of pregnant women were anaemic, and identified multiple pregnancy, caesarean section delivery, a big baby and HIV infection as risk factors for postpartum haemorrhage. Furthermore, he found that antenatal distribution of misoprostol (a drug that prevents excessive bleeding) to women for self-administration after childbirth was acceptable, safe, and increased uterotonic coverage. The study recommends distribution of misoprostol to pregnant women for self-administration after childbirth as a strategy to increase the number of women who access drugs that prevent excessive bleeding after childbirth and reduce the burden of postpartum haemorrhage among Ugandan women. This study was funded by THRiVE/WELCOME TRUST and supervised by Assoc. Prof. Florence Mirembe and Prof. Oona Campbell.

Effect of Highly Active Antiretroviral Therapy (HAART) on trends of selected opportunistic infections (OIs) and mortality among HIV positive individuals enrolled with the AIDS Support Organization (TASO) in Uganda

Dr. Rubaihayo John's study was motivated by the fact that trends of OIs and mortality among HIV positive individuals in Uganda were incompletely understood. The study showed that the frequency of selected OIs reduced tremendously after HAART though the frequency of geohelminths and diarrhoea remained relatively higher. All selected OIs except Cryptococcal meningitis and Kaposi's sarcoma showed reducing trends in the period 2001-2013. Mortality risk also reduced substantially during this period though remained relatively higher in Eastern and Northern Uganda. The predictors of OIs and mortality after HAART were gender, region and HIV clinical stage at HAART initiation. The study underscored the need for gender and regional specific interventions in addition to early screening and initiation of HAART to improve treatment outcomes. This study was privately funded and supervised by Assoc. Prof. Nazarius M Tumwesigye and Prof. Joseph Konde-Lule.

HPV vaccination of Ugandan adolescent schoolgirls: perceptions, knowledge, acceptability, psychological distress and sexual intentions

Dr. Turiho Kampikaho Andrew studied community perceptions of vaccination of adolescent girls against Human Papillomavirus, and its effect on girls' knowledge, acceptability, levels of psychological distress and intentions for sexual debut. Findings: 1) Vaccination was positively perceived although some concerns could endanger continued acceptability. 2) Vaccination was associated with more knowledge although specific knowledge was generally low. 3) Vaccination was associated with high psychological distress. 4) Vaccination was unlikely to influence sexuality. 5) Parental communication reduced risks of psychological distress and early sexual debut. Recommends: Future vaccinations should: 1) highlight the role of vaccination in preventing cervical cancer and safeguarding reproductive health; 2) clearly explain safety of vaccinations; 3) adequately prepare communities for vaccination; 4) have a psychosocial component to address emerging psychosocial needs; and 5) promote relevant parent-adolescent communication. This study was funded by Uganda National Council of Science and Technology, Makerere University, and the Carnegie Corporation of New York, and supervised by Assoc. Prof. Anne Katahoire, Assoc Prof. Wilson Muhwezi, and Dr Elialilia Okello.
